Useful Information

Visa

Visas to enter Thailand are different for each country, so it is important to check out with your countries own Thai consulate and find out if you need to apply for a visa before arrival.

Things to know

Thailand is known as the 'Land of Smiles', the land of friendliness and hospitality. It is also a land of traditions and customs that differ greatly from those of the Western world. As a foreigner, you might not be expected to effortlessly navigate the complex world of Thai etiquette. However, having a basic understanding of what is acceptable, what is frowned upon, and what is outright taboo can make a big difference in your social and professional life.

Do:

- Remove your shoes whenever you enter someone's home. It's also a good idea to check when you enter a shop or temple to see if others have removed their shoes.
- Wear modest, neat clothing. Since social status is often determined by clothing, it is important to present a well-groomed and conservative image.
- Address people by their first name. Often, the title Khun is added before the first name. This is similar to Mr. or Mrs., and is used for both men and women, regardless of marital status. Family names are typically only used in formal settings.
- Show respect for the royal family. Stop to pay respect during the National Anthem, and avoid making any negative comments about the king.

Don't:

- Show someone the bottoms of your feet, or allow your feet to be higher than the level of someone else's head.
- Touch a monk, especially if you are a woman. Monks are forbidden to have any physical contact with women, and this is strictly observed.
- Touch someone's head, or pass something over another person's head.
- Show displays of affection in public. Couples kissing or hugging in public is considered rude and inappropriate.
- Wear short shorts, low-cut tops, or revealing clothes. Generally, bathing suits or other revealing attire are only appropriate on the beach.

Safety

Overall, Thailand is a safe nation in which to travel. Just as you need to be aware of your surroundings and personal safety when out and about in your home country, you need to keep your wits about you in Thailand as well.

Motorbike Safety

You will need a driving license from your home country if you want to hire a motorbike or car. But, if you do not have an international license, or a Thai license, you will be driving illegally if you decide to take the risk. Police often check foreign drivers for the correct license, if you do not hold the correct license you could receive a fine.

Injury from a motorcycle accident is one of the most common claims received by insurers. If it's a bad one and you need medical evacuation, the cost could run to $100,000 or more. Don't be fooled, the insurer will check if you have a valid license. Most insurance companies will not cover your claim if you do not have the correct license.

If the shop lets you rent a bike without asking for your license, it doesn't mean you don't need one. Again, it's not their responsibility, it's yours to check local laws before you go.

Your own safety first

If you're still tempted to roll the dice, unlicensed and uninsured, do everything you can to make sure you don't get hurt in a crash.

Here are a few tips to keep you safe while on the road:

- Wear a helmet – preferably full-face.
- Wear protective clothing – long trousers and a jacket of sturdy material. Flip-flops, a t-shirt and shorts don't count as sturdy.
- Wear gloves - most people put out their hands to protect themselves in the event of a fall, even on a hard bitumen road approaching at 50 km/h. Ouch!
- Don't speed, drink or do drugs and ride.
- Don't ride at night.
- Don't ride when it's wet (especially in Koh Chang)

Transport in Koh Chang
